

I do not believe that broadcast ownership laws should be relaxed in any manner. In fact it would be of great public service for the laws to be made stricter. I am wary of the possibility that one company (or just a few) could control all avenues of access to information in any given market (Sherman trust). Relaxing ownership laws would also render the market less than competitive, raising the cost of entry to this market for new/smaller broadcasters to a financial standard that is unattainable.
